Mike Heath : Railway Moods: The Keighley and Worth Valley Railway before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Railway Moods: The Keighley and Worth Valley Railway:

The closure of the branch line between Keighley and Oxenhope in Yorkshire in 1962 prompted the formation of a preservation society that bought the line from British Rail and reopened it as a heritage railway in 1968. These images show the track, its locomotives and rolling stock in operation in all seasons and include station scenes, atmospheric night photography and studies of the period trackside features and station fittings.
