Professor Ian D. Rotherham, Christine Handley, Mick Liversidge : Sheffield Pubs before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Sheffield Pubs:

Sheffield is the fourth-largest city in England and was where the Industrial Revolution began in earnest. It is renowned for its high-quality steel and fine cutlery, for its two large universities and for having the biggest shopping centre in Europe, yet there is so much more to know about this proud South Yorkshire city. As in many places, these watering holes grew up with the city, both shaping and being shaped by its changing prosperity through the years. In Sheffield

Pubs, Ian Rotherham, Christine Handley and Mick Liversidge present an excellent collection of photographs from which the reader will glimpse some of Sheffield's 'lost' pubs as well as the town's more popular watering holes and established 'locals'.

About the Author Professor Ian D. Rotherham, an international authority on cultural and historical aspects of landscapes, is Reader in Tourism Environmental Change at Sheffield Hallam University. He works with the BBC Radio 4 History Programme, and has appeared in and advised on many documentaries and news programmes such as Panorama and Horizon. Christine Handley is a local historian interested in industrial history and changing landscapes. She has written chapters in and edited books on the local history of selected Sheffield communities.
