David Sharp : Thames Path Country (National Trail Guides) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Thames Path Country (National Trail Guides):

0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. IndispensibleBy James S.My wife and I walked the Thames Path from Oxford to London. I became obsessed with weight to the point that my usual dirty-clothes bag was too heavy at 4 ounces. Leaving this book home was never an option. An absolutely vital part of our planning and executing, both. The route can get tricky and the maps alone more than justify any expense.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Bought this for a trip to English countryside. The official guide to the riverside path from its Gloucestershire source all the way to the outskirts of London. With the London Thames now covered by Aurum's separate new guide, a companion volume can concentrate on the appeal of the full 150 miles of the country Thames, which winds all the way from its Gloucestershire source near Cirencester to Hampton Court on the edge of the London conurbation. This new edition has a wealth of new information about the many sights and places of interest along the way, from Wittenham Clumps that Paul Nash used to paint to Heston Blumenthal's Fat Duck restaurant at Bray, as well as full walking tours of historic Oxford and Windsor Eton. There are sections on Stanley Spencer at Cookham, and Cliveden and the Cliveden Set, as well as on handsome and interesting towns like Henley and Abingdon. There is also a new section on the wildlife and natural history of the Thames, and plenty of extra information on transport links to and from individual sections.

An updated edition of this attractive and informative national trail guide. No one is better qualified to write this guide than David Sharp>About the AuthorDavid Sharp is a Vice-President of the Ramblers, and led the campaign to achieve official designation of the Thames Path as a National trail. Tony Gowers was until 2011 the Trail Officer for the North Downs Way.
